Sharp Lookout. The rule that controls the O'Neill business is that goods must be new and worthy, and a long way exclusive. Our relation to the public is such that we can't afford to be shy about anything. Soon as new things show themselves we always know it; it's the business of our buyers to know how the market jumps, and with smart men always on the watch we are able to set the pace for the

A Curtain Sale.

The curtain store should be crowded to-day, with such values as these, and it would be if we could turn the newspapers into peepshows. Those who expect to curtain the summer home this summer should take advantage of this opportunity.
